

Farmers need to lead by example on safety

"PPE only works if you use it!" is the theme of this year's Canadian Agricultural Safety campaign with a focus on the use, fit and access of personal protective equipment (PPE) in agriculture.

The year-long campaign is being launched this week as part of Canadian Agricultural Safety Week (CASW).

The campaign is delivered by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture (CFA) and Canadian Agricultural Safety Association (CASA) in partnership with Farm Credit Canada (FCC) and Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada (AAFC).

"The idea behind the campaign theme 'PPE only works if you use it!' is two-fold," Marcel Hacault, executive director of CASA, said in a media release. "The first part encourages producers to think through their work before starting so they can anticipate and correct any hazards that may occur. The second part encourages producers to ensure the correct access, use, and fit of personal protective equipment, if needed."

When a hazard is identified there are several things you should do to correct it such as: redesigning the set-up; use less dangerous materials; change the work process or practices; change the equipment; and establish administrative controls or safety rules for workers. When all else fails to eliminate the hazard then personal protective equipment is used to reduce the hazard to acceptable levels.

An acceptable level of hazard is different for each person. Among other things, it will depend on the training, work experience, and physical capabilities. That's why it is so important to ensure that workers are properly trained to do their job and that the training is documented. PPE is the last line of defence for safety.
